The exercises commenced with a chorus "Loch Lomond" rendered by the choir. This was followed by a solo, "A Perfect Day" and "I Hear You Calling" by Orrin S. Hallock.

The Rev. Glies F. Goodenough then delivered a sprightly address of welcome in which he complimented nearly everybody and everything in Ledyard, and expressed gladness that those present were there.

The choir rendered "Carmena," and this was followed with prayer by the Rev. A. E. Kinmouth.

Mrs. R. J. Hehderson rendered a solo, "A Memory" and "Beautiful Isle of the Sea," in fine voice. The dinner was served under a tent upon the lawn adjoining the church. One can put out a blaze that started in Peter Sellas' new popcorn machine on Franklin square the other day and the apparatus, that cost $500 might have been a total loss otherwise. is no complicated mechanism.

Address by Dr. Pratt,

The address of the day was delivered by the Rev. Arthur Peabody Pratt, D. D. His theme embraced the lure of the hills and mountains. He described the process of mountain climbing and the difference between reaching the summit by means of an inclined reliway and attaining it by the laborious process of setting one foot before the other. The exhilaration of breathing the mountain air and inhaling the odor of mountain pines was dwelt upon, and sembling synovial fluid. When these sacs became inflamed, they cause pain and disability. Probably the form of bursitis most commonly known to the laity is that form of swelling which appears over the knee of women who are doing scrubbing work, and it consists of a swelling over the knee-cap taking a shape similar in form to the knee-cap and is known as "house-maid's knee." The other most common sites of bursitis are over the great trochanter or the bony prominence of the hip, also over the olecranon process of the ulna, and these conditions are generally due to the occupation of the individual, so that the bursitis develops over a part which is exposed to mechanical irritation, and an injury of this character comes on very gradually, and the on-set as a rule cannot be traced definitely to any specific time, but it is a process which covers not be traced definitely to any specific time, but it is a process which covers a considerable period of time.

In the present case we have simply the history of a sudden strain given by the claimant alone. We have no history of any continuous irritation to the part, other than that the claim-ant states he strained himself on a certain day.

certain day.

The claimant further states that he drew it to the attention of two of his fellow workmen on the day on which he claims to have received the injury. When questioned concerning this point both of these employes who were with him at the time stated that not only were they ignorant regarding his receiving such an injury and that he ceiving such an injury and that he continued to work for some days afterwards, but they contradict flatly the statement that he drew their attention to his straining himself upon the day in question.

During the hearing there were present eight witnesses, all of whom were working with the claimant, either on working with the claimant, either on the same job or in the immediate vi-cinity of the work being done and for the same company. No one of them knew anything about an injury being received by the claimant at the time nor was the attention of any of them drawn to an injury on the day on which he claims he received an in-jury which he claims he received an injury.

The first notification which was brought to the attention of the undersigned of the injury in question was on June 7th, 1915, by a man who wrote in behalf of said Allard, stating that he had received an injury on Dec. 9th, 1914, which letter was received some six months after the date on which the injury is claimed to have been received. When said letter was received, the question involving the extra territorial force of the Connecticut act was pending in the supreme court, and in answering letter above referred to, it was suggested by the undersigned that there would be no special advantage in hearing the case in question until the case before the courts was decided, as claimant's in-

In view of the claimant's failure to notify his employer promptly of this injury, and in view of the recent decision of Judge Tuttle on the effects of failure to notify, claimant did not give his employer an opportunity to furnish the proper medical and surgical treatment, which he should have under the law, and in order that the failure to notify may not prevent the employer from furnishing the proper medical and surgical assistance and so oftentimes avoid a prolonged period of disability, it becomes imperative that the employe shall notify his employer within the thirty days following an injury.

In order to find for the claimant, it is necessary that the claim shall be established by a fair preponderance of svidence. After reviewing the testimony and considering all the facts in the case, the claimant has failed to establish his claim, and consequently the claim is dismissed. Most Children Have Worr

The memorandum of decision is as follows:

In order to arrive at a proper understanding of the character of the injury we have at hand, it becomes necessary to know just exactly what a bursa is and what bursitis is.

A bursa is a sac resting over a bony prominence or interposed between muscles and tendons which pass over bony points, and may exist as a normal condition or it may be developed as the result of chronic mechanical pressure and irritation. It is a fibrous sac which contains a clear fluid resembling synovial fluid. When these sacs became inflamed, they cause pain and disability.
